

Dear prospective students,

In both law and economics, modern young professionals are not only experts in their fields, but are also able to work in an interdisciplinary fashion. This is often referred to as 'transversal skills'. Think of a T, with the vertical axis being your particular area of specialization and the horizontal bar symbolizing your ability to collaborate with people across geographical and cultural borders. Both aspects are equally important.

Transversal skills are the key to success in today's labour market. Attending the EMLE Programme, which has been committed to delivering graduate education at the intersection between law and economics for over 25 years, will allow you to develop these skills.

Here is why: first, you will learn that laws have economic effects and that economic mechanisms vary with the institutional context, which notably includes the laws of different jurisdictions. In other words, you will learn that the world is more complex than you would have ever thought. Then—and here is the good news—the EMLE will teach you how to make sense of this complexity, not just by studying more law or more economics, but rather by learning how to integrate the two perspectives.

And finally, you will learn to cross many other borders than just the one between law and economics. Studying at two or three international universities, and in varying groups of people from over 30 different countries, you will become a true citizen of the world.

We cordially invite you to apply to the EMLE Programme and strive to spend an exciting year with us in a challenging international environment.

It will be a life-changing experience!

The EMLE Management Board

The different tracks

This one-year master has a track system, which allows you to enter a specialization starting from the second term. If you wish to earn a certificate of specialization next to your EMLE diploma, you can choose from the following tracks:

- Economic Analysis of Public & International Law
- Economic Analysis of Innovation & Intellectual Property
- Economic Analysis of Markets, Corporations & Regulators

The universities

- Term 1: Haifa, Hamburg or Rotterdam
- Term 2: Ghent, Hamburg or Rotterdam
- Term 3: Aix-en-Provence, Barcelona, Hamburg, Mumbai, Rome or Warsaw

The courses

The different courses are devoted to the economic analysis of the most important branches of law (e.g. private, public, international and European law).

Apart from the courses that belong to a specialization track, all students attend the following courses to build a solid foundation in the major areas of law and economics:

- Introduction to Law
- Introduction to Microeconomics
- Concepts & Methods of Law & Economics
- Economic Analysis of Public Law
- Economic Analysis of Private Law
- Empirical Legal Studies
- Corporate Governance & Finance
- Competition Law & Economics

Excellence - Experience - EMLE

Our partners

Indira Gandhi Institute of Development Research

SGH

GHENT
UNIVERSITY

אוניברסיטת חיפה
University of Haifa
جامعة حيفا

Universität Hamburg
DER FORSCHUNG | DER LEHRE | DER BILDUNG

LUMSA
UNIVERSITA

EUROPEAN MASTER
IN LAW & ECONOMICS

Co-funded by the European Union

EUROPEAN MASTER IN LAW & ECONOMICS

Study Law & Economics at up to three Top Universities with students from over 30 different nationalities

What is Law & Economics?

Law & Economics means economic analysis of law. The law and the economy interact in many ways. For example, the decision whom to hold liable influences the behavior of economic decision-makers. A better understanding of the interaction between law and economics may improve the quality of the legal system and a country's economic well-being at large.

Knowing the effects of divergent legal rules and institutions based on theory or empirical analysis, EMLE graduates will be able to discern efficient rules from those that are inefficient and formulate proposals to increase the efficiency of law, contracts and other deals.

The University of Haifa

UPF, Barcelona

Contact us

You can visit us on www.emle.org or facebook at:
www.facebook.com/EuropeanMasterLawEconomics

If you have any questions, please email to:
info@emle.org

Photos
Universities of LUMSA, Haifa; Christophe Cargutati, J. Brussel, I. Putzier

Training Legal Professionals,
Academics and Policymakers of the Future

Excellence - Experience - EMLE